The case of our client, Mr. Bryan, of 97 Harcourt Street is an instance of peculiar hardship, though not a large claim as the claims go. He and his wife had put their savings into the purchase of premises in Harcourt Street, out of which they derived an income, residing in the upper portion of the house, sub-letting other portions,

Dear Sir,

and Mrs. Bryan on the ground floor carrying on the business of a fruiterer's shop. They were particularly inoffensive people, quiet, orderly, industrious citizens, and in a moment were deprived not only of the roof over their heads, but of their savings and means of livelihood; nothing can compensate 39, Fleet Street, have personally the great Dublin. Why with them, and if it were at all possible to obtain some temporary advance to enable the Contractor to get to work and start rebuilding, we would advocate the adoption of such a course.
