19th December,

Dear Sirs, re Claim No. 5454.

In reply to your letter of the 11th instant re above claim, I am directed by the Committee to state that it appears that the goods were sent from Dublin on 19th April and reach Newbridge next day, but, through the fault of the Railway Coy's servants, were sent back by mistake as empties and found at North Wall and were not received at Newbridge Station until long after the Rebellion had ceased.

I am to add that the loss would never have happened but for the mistake of the Railway Company.

Yours faithfully,

Secretary.

Dear Sir,

re Claim No. 5454.

With reference to your letter of the 7th instant re above your letter does not seem very clear to us, as the Railway Coy, would read from your letter that the goods were sent back from North Wall before the Rebellion ceased, which is not correct, the goods were sent <sup>Dublin 19 April</sup> from here and reached Newbridge next day, but through the fault of the Railways Coy's servants were sent back by mistake as empties and found at North Wall and were not received at Newbridge Station until long after the Rebellion had ceased.

We should feel obliged if you will send us a corrected letter so as it can be sent on ~~the~~ to the Railway Coy.

The goods were properly addressed to the Curragh Camp, Newbridge Station, and were sent by Claimants on Wednesday 19th April 1916. They duly arrived at Newbridge Station and instead of sending on the Barrels to the Military Camp the Railway Company sent them back to the North Wall, and when they found out their mistake they sent them on again to Newbridge. Owing to the Rebellion, the Beer could not then be delivered.

In my opinion, the Railway Company are clearly liable for their own neglect.
